Bangor Flour Mill.

TO FARMERS.

We wish to call your attention to our new mill recently put in operation, and to the fact that we have a FIRST CLASS MILL, and have been in operation long enough to demonstrate that we can do FIRST CLASS WORK. There are five conditions required to make good Flour First, a good cleaner, second, a good run of Burrs; third, a good Bolt fourth, a good Miller. These we feel assured we have Now if you will furnish the ... that is good Wheat, we see no reason for ... not obtaining good Flour. By doing the best we can we hope to merit your patronage.

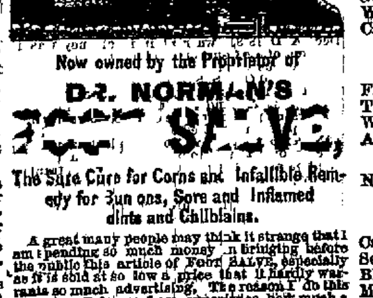
Old Witch House, Salem, (Built in 1631)



Now owned by the Proprietor of

DR. NORMAN'S FOOT SALVE,

The Sure Cure for Corns and Infallible Remedy for Bunions, Sore and Inflamed Joints and Chilblains.

A great many people may think it strange that I am spending so much money in bringing before the public this article of FOOT SALVE, especially as it is sold at so low a price that it hardly warrants so much advertising. The reason I do this is because I know from experience how much a person suffers from a corn or other disease of the feet, and I think it my duty to make known to the suffering community as much as it is in my power to do the true value of this FOOT SALVE, that they may experience the relief that I did from its use some two years ago. I had been suffering at that time for several months from a hard corn, which was so painful at times that it was almost unbearable, when Dr Norman, a Chiropodist, came to my place of business and offered me the Salve to sell; but I took no stock in it, as I had never heard before of a salve that had been used with perfect success for diseases of the feet only. He induced me to have it applied to my corn as a guarantee of its worth, the first morning after its use I was surprised to find that all the soreness had disappeared, and in a week's time the corn came off itself. Finding with what success it worked in my case, I bought a quantity of the Salve and offered it to my customers, who used it for all the diseases for which it is recommended with like results. I finally bought the right and formula from Dr. Norman, and now offer it to the public generally at a price within the reach of all, trusting that by using it as directed that they will experience the great benefit that I did from its use.

... DR. NORMAN'S FOOT SALVE is sold by all Druggists, or sent to any address on receipt of price. Prepared by ...

A JACK-AT-ALL-TRADES

[From the Commercial Bulletin]

SOME IDEA OF A MAN S PROFESSION

"Yes sir," remarked Smartington, 'I can tell a man s occupation in five minutes by talking with him—he's sure to let it out in some way—can't keep silent about business he's interested in '

"Don t say so," remarked his friend Crank, as they both seated themselves upon the top seat of a White Mountain stage coach, "well, now here s this new comer, he in the straw hat and spectacles, that's going to ride beside us, suppose you try him "

All right my boy, he's an easy one, by his looks," and so when the stranger had settled himself in his seat, proffered a cigar to each of the two which was accepted, and lighted his own, Smartington began

"Mighty fine cigars, sir, get 'em in Boston?"

"Yes, some Judge Gay, of the Supreme Court gave me just before I started '

(Smart, winking at his companion) "You gentlemen of the legal profession always use a good article of this kind."

"The article is a good one, but I am not in the legal profession," replied he of the straw title

"Oh, I beg pardon. Splendid morning this for a stage coach ride, isn't it?"

"Yes, but a much better one for a tramp through the country."

"Then you like a good walk? I suppose you are used to it—don't mind fatigue, eh?"

"Oh, no," said straw hat, "I've walked hundreds of miles, rode, too, horseback as well as mule back "

"Where did you ever walk most?' (Smart eyed him sharply—he couldn't be a tramp)

"Down South, during the war."

"Indeed!" Did you see any of the Union generals?"

"Certainly," said the stranger, smiling, "knew Burnside well, he a good pedestrian himself—little Phil Sheridan, too, he looks better on horseback than on foot—saw him in that ride—Sheridan's Ride, you know; I was at Winchester. Fighting Joe Hooker's a splendid fellow; with him in two campaigns; rides well; talks well, walks well."

"Ah, then you are a soldier, I see," said Smart decidedly.

"Oh no, sir! wish I had been but I never shouldered a musket in my life."

Smart looked a little disappointed as his friend nudged him and gave a subdued chuckle at his second failure, but he returned to the charge again. "I suppose business and amusement will both be lively this fall."

"Yes, there's every promise of heavy freights from West to East this fall. I think Vanderbilt will try to make some changes in '81 but that will require fresh combinations ... He is more reticent about it ... than Tom Scott I'd rather talk with Scott ten minutes than Vanderbilt half an hour, as far as information is concerned "

"Well, which on the whole do you railroad men think the ablest Scott or Vanderbilt"

"Well, I know the old Commodore better than Scott, although the latter always ound very sound and practicable—but bless you, I'm not a railroad man," said the new comer laughing

"Indeed then I suppose you don't object to the stage as a travelling conveyance '

"No, sir, not in this part of the country—nor the dramatic stage as an amusement at home "

"Nor I, but I prefer a good Shakesperian play to the variety show and burlesques of the present day—don t you?

"Generally, though bo h may be enjoyed " said the straw hat wearer

But you have certainly seen Edwin Booth Barret and John Macullough, haven't you?

' Oh yes, knew 'em all well, and Forrest and the elder Booth, Charles Kean, elder Vandenhoff, Macready and others such as Gus Brooke—Gustavus Vaughn Brooke you know—and Jim Murdock, an excellent Hamlet now a reader. Why I ve helped Brooke dress and make up for his part in the Corsican Brothers—poor fellow lost at sea

"Really! ' said Smart You appear well posted about actors

' Yes sir knew them all, before and behind the curtain "

"Not in the profession yourself?

' Oh no sir, never spoke a line that way, or faced the foot-lights

' Think there will be much speculation in stocks this fall? '

Well, there may be some in the silver stock—in San Francisco, they'll steam up mining stocks well this fall, and Wall street is hungry for outsiders after its long fast Gold speculation is flattened out, money s easy, English consols 94 7-8, and our bonds a shade firmer say 7 2-3 for the new 5s, and I see Northwest and St Paul have advanced at the New York Board

Yes But if you have dealt in stocks I s pose would feel encouraged—eh?

Well, I don t know how I might feel but I don t deal in them, I leave that to the brokers

Another nudge and snicker from Crank and Smart began to have a dim perception that the stranger might be quizzing him but he rallied again—

"The currency question appears to be a pretty important one just now '

"Yes so it is I had a long talk with Sherman before I left Washington I think he is on the right track, and hope he will stick

"Hope it won t offend you if I say some of us business men would like it if Congress would take six months more vacation?"

' Not a bit, I wish they would—it would save me lots of work "

How so? Are you a member or a government officer?"

"Good gracious' no I hope not, I like my own business better

A DEMAGOGUE'S RANT

No person has labored harder, in his way, to drive people from Maine and deter others from coming hither than Marcellus Emery has done for years past, by representing this State as the most poverty stricken tax ridden and generally miserable locality on the continent. He is never tired of ringing the changes on this theme and if he and his newspaper commanded attention, they would have worked most serious harm to the credit and prosperity of Maine. Fortunately his [illegible] is readily recognized as that of a demagogue and he rarely fails to exhibit the cheap partisan animus of his screeds by urging that nothing is required to transform Maine from a purgatory to a paradise except to put him and his political party in power.

While the public administration in this State has for years been the subject of remark throughout the country for the honest, economical and efficient management of its affairs Emery has been railing in season and out of season that our government was extravagant, profligate, and ruinous, and that there was no balm in Gilead except voting the Democratic, or more recently the Greenback Democratic, ticket.

Last evening he let himself loose in his [illegible] style, bewailing the "frightful load of taxation under which the people of Maine have staggered for the last seventeen years," omitting, however, to mention that the period is precisely that during which taxation has been incurred to pay for a Democratic rebellion which he encouraged at the start, and to which he rendered all possible aid and comfort to the end. As the responsibility for this taxation is a very important element of discussion we do not rest the serious charge of Emery's complicity upon any prejudiced statement, but cite in evidence the following resolution introduced by a prominent Democrat of this city and adopted at a great Union meeting in Norombega Hall, Aug 21 1861

"[illegible] That the newspaper called THE DEMOCRAT published in this city, by its unscrupulous advocacy of the legal right and moral justness of the means, measures and ends of the Southern secessionists, by its wilfully false and mendacious representation of the causes of the Rebellion, ITS EXULTATIONS AT ALL DISASTERS WHICH HAPPENED TO THE NATION, AT ITS [illegible] TENDING THAT AID AND COMFORT TO THE ARMED ENEMIES OF OUR COUNTRY WHICH MAKES ITS EDITORS, PUBLISHERS AND CONTRIBUTORS GUILTY OF TREASON and we brand all persons connected with THAT PESTILENT SHEET AS UNWORTHY OF PUBLIC OR PRIVATE RESPECT OR CONFIDENCE"

Mr Emery will perceive that the above expression of public sentiment was adopted precisely at the beginning of that period of seventeen years to which he has called attention. Either he relies upon public forgetfulness or else he has unusual effrontery to remind the people how much they have had to pay in taxes—to say nothing of the sacrifice of loyal lives—for the overthrow of a wicked rebellion with which he sympathised throughout. But he comes boldly forward with an arraignment of the Republican party for incurring expense to save the Union and shouts to the world that the State of Maine is poor—DESPERATELY POOR.

Then he tells how the remedy is to be applied. [illegible] his hosts of Greenback Democrats and Democratic Greenbackers with a broadsword in one hand and a broad axe in the other he instructs them to begin by lopping off the trifling amount of $400 000 annually from our State expenditures. For the amusement of our readers we copy below the table of items "each and every one of which," says our Central street statesman "should be abolished by the incoming Legislature."

State Board of Agriculture,	$800
Supt Common Schools	1 500
Clerks in Adjt Gen's Office	1,600
Clerk Supt Common Schools	1 200
[illegible] Female Orphan Asylum,	1 000
Bath Military and Naval Asylum,	8,000
Bangor Children's Home	5 000
Maine General Hospital	5 000
Industrial School for Girls	4,500
School Mill Tax	243,427
Free High School	40 070
Agriculture College	15 218
State Normal Schools	17,500
Expenses Supt Common Schools,	565
Agricultural Societies,	7,500
Bank Examiner	1 243
Bounty on Animals	3,609
Military Purposes,	10 000
Fish Commissioners	2 500
Reduction of Printing,	20,000
Reduction of State Prison Expenses,	10 000
	$400,742

The very essence of demagogism could not be more fully revealed than in the parading of that list of proposed reductions of expenses. That he would strike at public education wherever he could hit, was a matter of course, but like the trickster that he is he inserts in the middle of his list a single item comprising more than half of his aggregate, the abolition of which by repealing the School Mill Tax Law would not reduce taxation one cent. Under that law the funds that would otherwise be raised in the towns for school purposes, are assessed and collected by the State, the effect being that the smaller towns gain advantage, the cities and large towns where property is greatest contributing toward the support of schools in the less wealthy localities. The law assesses the tax on the property of the State and then distributes it per capita for school purposes, instead of having each town to raise all the money needed for its schools. The expediency of the system may properly be discussed, like any other public measure, but the representation that the 240 odd thousand dollars thus raised is a special burden on the people and that the repeal of the law is to remove the burden of nearly a quarter of a million of taxes, is a transparent fraud that no one but an arrant demagogue would attempt.

Having eliminated the sum of $243,427 from the amount of the proposed "reduction of expenditures," let us see how the $157 305 remaining in the list is made up. We find that it is proposed to save $60,825 by cutting off every dollar of aid rendered by the State in any way for the maintenance of our system of free common schools, the very foundation of free government and the greatest of all blessings to the people and especially to the poor. Our broad-axe reformer makes a clean sweep of the school business, from the Free High Schools and the Normal Schools, down to the clerk in the Superintendent's office. Having wiped out the educational department he next turns to the agencies for the promotion of Agriculture, and beginning with the State College abolishes the aid to Agricultural Societies and lops off the $800 for the Secretary of the State Board of Agriculture. In this way he proposes to save $23,518 that the State lavished last year upon the farming interests of Maine. Next he swings his axe at the Benevolent and Humane Institutions of the State and whacks them all off, saving $24,000 from the orphans, hospital patients and the girls' reformatory that the State has hitherto aided. As $5,000 of this amount came to the Bangor Children's Home, we wonder that so sturdy a Democratic reformer as ex Mayor Bass failed to lop off the extravagance when he was a member of the House. But the aid to all these institutions, which has been questioned often before by more sincere men than the editor of the Commercial, amounts to only a little over one-twentieth of his grand aggregate. Of his $157,305, we find, therefore, that $103,343 is made up by proposing to abolish all the appropriations for schools, agricultural and benevolent purposes. If he had only cut off all the supplies for insane State paupers he would have rounded out his list very effectively.

The remaining $18,962 is made up of a variety of items. Last year we expended $2,538 72 for the services and necessary outlay of our zealous Fish Commissioners in the propagation of food fishes, a matter of great importance to the wealth of our State. All over the world the value and importance of protecting and developing the food fishery of interior waters has become recognized and the results obtained have stimulated everywhere more comprehensive effort and more liberal outlay. The pittance of $2,500 provided by the State of Maine to secure one of the chief supplies of cheap and wholesome food, it is proposed to lop off with a broad-axe in the name of "economical reform." Mr. Emery's antipathy to Maine soldiers is well understood, so that no one will be surprised that he proposes to mow down our State Militia with one sweep of his "broad-sword," thereby cutting off $10,000, and adding to this $1,600 by discharging the clerk in the Adjutant General's office who attends to the pension papers of disabled soldiers. Then he goes for the Bank Examiner, on the ground we suppose, that when banking is done on fiat money there will be nothing to examine, and $1,243 more is lopped off. Next he gets around to the bounty on bears and wolves, and trusting to locality or leanness for personal immunity from attack, he abolishes the $3,609 paid by the State last year for the destruction of wild animals. This leaves but two items. One proposes to reduce the expenses for State Prison by $10,000, without saying that the appropriation last year was largely demanded by the cost of building an extension, but conveying an implied charge of extravagance. The commendatory report of a Democratic investigating committee only confirmed the reputation of our prison management as excelled by none in the country, and the appointment of our late Deputy Warden as Warden of the State Prison of Vermont is a very practical endorsement. We really think it very doubtful if any Greenback Democrat or Democratic-Greenbacker will prove more capable in conducting the affairs of the State Prison than the Warden who has made it a model of security and thrift.

In the last item the demagogism shines out conspicuously. Mr Emery proposes to reduce the expenses for State printing to the extent of $20,000. The reader will naturally wonder what is the enormous amount from which it is proposed to save this fraction. The expenses for State printing last year were $20,666 62, and Mr. Emery's proposed reduction will leave just $666 62 for the public printing for the year 1879! How far this reduction is suggested by the fact that Emery has no printing office in Augusta while Eben F Pillsbury has, must be left to conjecture, but it is of a piece with the blatherskite that makes up the above proposal to reduce expenses by $400 000.

That notwithstanding the moderation in salaries and expenditures that have ruled in Maine, there may be found opportunities for some still further economy in accordance with the pressure of the times, no one will seek to dispute, but the man who rants about enormous extravagance and who juggles with figures to the extent of half a million dollars to give himself the appearance of a reformer, is simply that familiar character, recognized and despised in all ages, a cheap demagogue.

The Boston Post remarks: "This is just what Senator-elect Pendleton of Ohio said in the National House of Representatives in relation to the Legal tender act of 1862, which is as true now as it was then. 'The wit of man has never discovered a means by which paper currency can be kept at par value, except by its speedy, cheap, certain convertibility into gold and silver. Unless convertible, they (legal tenders) have always depreciated; they always will depreciate, they ought to depreciate, because they are only valuable as the representatives of gold and silver; and if they are not convertible into that of which they are the representatives, they must necessarily lose their value.'"

We copy from the Commercial, which was unkind enough to copy it from the New York Sun, an exposure of the frauds perpetrated by the conductors of the Advocate, the National organ of the Greenback party, which was scattered broadcast through this State during the past year, as a "champion of the people." and an exponent of "reform." Its career is practically duplicated on a smaller scale by numerous similar sheets that are trading on public credulity while they pander to mischievous delusions.

General B. F. Butler seems to be very impartial in championing New Orleans claims, when he gets a good retaining fee. Only a little while ago he devoted himself to pushing through the Navy prize-money claims for the capture of New Orleans, he and others getting $140,000 and odd dollars for fees, and now he is counsel for one Whalen, who sues General Sheridan for something over $400,000 for removing him from a Louisiana plantation while Sheridan was in command at New Orleans.

Ben Hill declares that he is bound to make a speech on the Blaine resolutions and will not be muzzled by his party associates. We hope Benjamin will give himself full swing. His speeches are always valuable to the Republican party and Senator Blaine could not wish a better thing than that Ben Hill should oppose his demand for investigation of Southern frauds.

The Administration is said to be patting itself on the back with joy because it has caught up with the party. If it doesn't stop smiling and brace up more yet, it will have a chance to catch up again before long, for the party is going at much the faster pace.—Tribune.

Nast makes a good point on the authors of the Buzzard Dollar, by printing under its motto "In God we Trust," the text of the IIId Commandment: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," etc.

A DEMOCRATIC WITNESS.

[From the N. Y. Tribune.]

Our South Carolina letter to-day contains the most remarkable testimony yet given as to the election frauds in that State. The witness is James L. Campbell, of Charleston, a Hampton Democrat and a lawyer of conspicuous ability and high standing. His evidence, reluctantly given against his own party, and given only in part, is more damaging than anything any Republican has yet asserted, because it comes from a Democrat. Mr. Campbell says that the purpose of the law passed to abolish polling-places was avowedly "to disfranchise the negroes" and that in Charleston County, "about 3 500 colored men were prevented from voting, mostly by the operation of that act." Mr. Campbell ran as an independent Democratic candidate for the Legislature, his actual vote being 11,000, that of his opponent about 5 000; when the ballots had been "counted" Mr Campbell had 9,000, his opponent 14,000. If Congress had provided penalties for conspiracies to defraud as well as for violence, Mr Campbell says that he "could convict members of the State and County Democratic Committees." "We will make no contest, for the men who have done this would sit in judgment upon it." He mentions as the worst examples of fraud the two famous precincts where, if the vote counted was actually cast, one ballot must have been received every 12 seconds at one of them, and at the other, one ballot every 20 seconds, throughout the whole day, and he declares that having stood opposite to one of these places for an hour, he can certify that very few men went in to vote, "sometimes the place was empty for twenty minutes at a time." These are mere hints of the evidence which Mr Campbell says he will furnish to any Democratic editor who desires it. Now, gentlemen, don't all speak at once!

GORDON'S MISTAKE.

[From the Schenectaday Union.]

Senator Gordon—don't you forget that the North will follow the lead of Blaine and Conkling and all the other leaders, so long as they call it to resent the most flagrant outrages against the freedom of speech and the freedom of the ballot at the South! The same North that crushed you in your madness of rebellion, will see to it that you shall not long trample in the dust the most sacred rights of citizenship in the South, in your mad attempts at gaining power by fraud and violence! You assume to censure the North because it complains that late rebels shall not be allowed to defy the Constitution and disfranchise a race! You, one of the chiefs of the rebellion, complain because the North objects to your subverting the Government, the same as you did in 1861!

THE NATIONAL GREENBACK ORGAN.

WHOLESALE FRAUD PERPETRATED IN THE NAME OF "REFORM"

[From the New York Sun.]

We have received complaints against the New York Advocate from subscribers of ours in nineteen States of the Union. They are that they have sent money for subscriptions, sewing machines, microscopes, and other articles, and got no returns. The postmasters' bills show that the proprietors received this money. The editor says that he dropped his large list of country subscribers after the recent election because of a failure of one of his presses. From the letters and explanations we glean the following information:

I.—That since the country list of the Advocate has been dropped the subscriptions of hundreds of new country subscribers have been received and retained, when the proprietors acknowledge that they were unable to forward the news papers. For aught we know the Advocate is still receiving such subscriptions.

II.—That when subscribers called at the office and asked why their papers were not sent, they were told that it was owing to a mistake that should be rectified, and not told that their names had been dropped from the list.

III.—That, after the list was dropped, advertisers were led to pay a dollar a line, imagining that 700 000 copies of the newspapers were circulating weekly.

IV.—That on Oct. 9, when letters received at this office show that the list was being dropped, the Advocate sent a letter to Dahlgren, Ill., putting its circulation at nearly 1,000 000.

V.—That orders for sewing machines have been solicited on faithful promises of immediate attention, and the money retained, when the concern had no machines to fill such orders.

VI.—That the persons who sent subscriptions and orders for machines and other articles have repeatedly written to the Advocate, knowing that their money had been received, yet could obtain no answer.

VII.—That as long ago as last August, when Mr. Shupe acknowledges his receipts were nearly $22,000 a month, money was taken on such orders, and no goods were forwarded. Nor was any explanation vouchsafed to those who had sent their money and were asking what was the matter.

VIII.—That in October a letter was sent from the Advocate office to J. J. Sherman, asserting that the delay in forwarding the sewing machines was the fault of the Domestic Machine Company, when inquiries show that that company did not and never had supplied the Advocate with sewing machines.

IX.—That orders for tea, microscopes, and other articles, for which the money has been received, remain unfilled, without a word of explanation.

X.—That repeated applications from poor girls and others to have their money returned received no attention.

XI.—That, though the Advocate has been published weekly since that time, not a word of explanation has appeared in its columns.

XII.—That the "Co-operative Department" of the Advocate is still in existence, and its proprietors offer to forward various articles at given prices, when scores of orders on which they have received money are not filled.

Is there any rule of honesty by which such transactions can be measured?

A NEW IDEA!
KENNEDY'S Cakes, Jumbles, Etc.
MADE BY MACHINERY.
Having purchased the "Holmes JUMBLE and CAKE Machine" with the exclusive right of the New England States, I now propose to place in every first-class Grocery a variety of rich Cake Goods in addition to the 144 kinds of Crackers and Biscuit now manufactured by me, at a price that will enable them to be used freely, and which is far below what the same class of goods can be made for by hand as at present. At the same time they will be found much superior, being uniform, and much lighter and more delicate than can possibly be produced by hand.
The following are some of the varieties now produced by the machine

Confectioner's Jumbles,	Sugar Plum Drops,
Cinnamon "	Variegated "
Marble Top "	Drop Pound Cake,
Spice "	Kisses,
Fruit "	Vanilla Cakes,
Common "	Spice "
Almond Maccaroons,	Molasses Drop Cakes,
Cocoanut "	Cinnamon Wafers,
Almond Drops,	Lady Fingers,
Fruit "	Sponge Drop Cakes,
Cocoanut "	Half Fingers,
Chocolate "	Spice "

I propose to place in every Store a Sample Box, and a trial of them will prove all this advertisement calls for. If your Grocer has not already these goods in stock, ask him to order from the Sole Mart in the New England States

MILK---5 CENTS PER QT.
Believing that it is the best policy to have but one price for articles on sale, I have fixed the price of milk furnished from my farm at 5 cents per qt, until further notice. My stock of cows, in number comprise some of the best milkers in the State having been selected with regard to quantity and quality and all milk furnished to my customers is supplied by my own cows. I shall spare no pains to secure to my customers good, pure and rich milk. My farm is situated about three and a half miles from the city, therefore the milk can be delivered in less than one hour after it is milked. It is a well known fact that it does not improve milk to haul it a long distance.

Senator Johnson says it is a matter of greater importance than anything that has attracted the attention of Virginia since the proclamation of President Lincoln of April 17th, 1861, and no such exercise of federal power has ever been attempted through the judiciary from the adoption of the constitution in 1789 to the present time. The prisoners are still in the custody of the United States Marshal awaiting the trial ordered by the Federal Court, and the whole affair has assumed a most serious aspect.

Bradley Johnson Gets up a Resolution for "an Investigation."

RICHMOND, Dec. 6. In the Senate to-day General Bradley Johnson introduced a preamble and resolution setting forth in detail the facts connected with the trial of the Reynolds brothers (two negroes) in Patrick county in this State, for murder, and the subsequent action of Judge Rivers of the United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia. In awarding a writ of habeas corpus upon the representations that the State court had refused to allow negroes to sit on a jury and taking the prisoners from the custody of the Sheriff of said county. The resolution provides for the appointment of a special committee of five Senators and seven members of the House to examine and consider the subject and inquire how far such exercise of jurisdiction by said United States Judge is warranted by the Constitution and laws of the United States and if such action be unwarranted and contrary to the rights reserved to this Commonwealth, the people thereof to report such mode and measure of redress and manner of preventing a repetition thereof as is necessary and advisable. No other steps have been taken in the matter, except that the Government has sent for the records in the cases and other information which will be submitted to this committee.

GREAT BRITAIN.
A Ministerial Libel Suit.

LONDON, Dec. 3. In the Nottingham police court yesterday, Rev. Fred Bell, formerly of Brooklyn, New York, brought an action for libel against Mr. Stevenson, a solicitor, and Rev. Richard Griffith, a Baptist minister, for circulating hand-bills charging Bell with immoral conduct with a servant of the house where he was a guest. Mr. Bell was holding a religious revival meeting in Nottingham at the time and was drawing large audiences. The case was adjourned for one week.

The Expenses of the Afghan War.

Lord Cranbrook, Secretary of State for India, in the House of Lords, and Stanhope, Under Secretary of State for India, in the House of Commons, will Monday move a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That Her Majesty having directed the military expedition of her forces charged upon Indian revenues, to be dispatched against the Ameer of Afghanistan, this House consents that the revenues of India shall be applied to defray the expenses of the military operations which may be carried on beyond the external frontiers of Her Majesty's Indian possessions.

The resolution is framed in compliance with the act of 1858, which provides that, except for preventing or expelling invasion or under other sudden and urgent necessity, the consent of Parliament must be obtained before any part of the revenue of India can be applied to defray expenses for any military operation beyond the frontiers of India. The resolution will raise the whole question of the Government's policy, the question of the actual distribution of the burdens of the war being left for future decision.

Things Lively in the Commons.

In the Commons this afternoon Whitbread, Liberal, gave notice that he would offer a resolution disapproving of the Afghan war, and asked for the appointment of a day for its discussion.

Northcote said he could not postpone the Government's resolution fixed for Monday.

Upon this announcement of the Chancellor Lord Hartington appealed to the Government to give place to Whitbread's resolution.

Gladstone supported Hartington's appeal, but Northcote stating that the Government's motion not necessarily meaning to charge all costs of the war to India, he could not consent to adjourn the discussion.

Chamberlaine, Radical, gave notice of an addition to Whitbread's resolution attacking the alleged unconstitutionality of the Government's proceedings relative to Afghanistan.

The Times on the Debate and the Policy.

The Times' leader on Thursday night's debate in Parliament says:

For the last month or two our columns have been crowded with the language of the indignant, and protests, more vehement than are often read, against the impolicy and iniquity of the proceedings of the Government. Parliament has met and all this indignation has an opportunity, both to express and to justify itself, but the only result is two very tame debates in which the most responsible persons say that they have not yet had time for definite judgment on the subject. If Lord Granville and Lord Hartington were inconsistent their inconsistency was in one respect of a very happy character. They both stated distinctly that an emergency having arisen they would give their whole influence to furnish the government with all that might be necessary to carry it to a full conclusion. As responsible statesmen they recognize that there is no other course open to us and they have thus assured the practical unanimity of the councils of the nation. The main result of the debate is to show that the vehement opposition which has been threatened cannot be maintained, and though much light may be thrown on the subject by subsequent discussion, the general verdict of yesterday is not likely to be altered. The first victory of the war and the practical acquiescence of Parliament has thus happily coincided, and we may augur well for the future of our new policy.

LONDON, Dec. 6. A despatch from Vienna says the ministerial crisis at Constantinople has produced a very unfavorable impression here. Kheireddin Pasha the new Grand Vizar, is one of Austria's bitterest adversaries. He urged the Sultan to forcibly resist Austrian occupation of Turkish territory. He is regarded here as an unscrupulous schemer capable of hastening Turkey to her ruin. The change of Ministry is believed to be mainly attributable to Russian intrigue.

MR. W. J. CORTHELL has tendered to the Governor his resignation as State Supervisor of the Public Schools. Mr. Corthell has filled this office with great credit alike to himself and the State. His resignation was made necessary by his acceptance of the position of Principal of the New State Normal School at Gorham.

GRAND CONCERT. On next Monday evening there will be a grand concert in the First M. E. church on Pine street, under the direction of Mr. E. E. Holden. By reference to another column it will be seen that the programme is one of marked excellence and that nearly all of our best local talent will take part. As the price of admission has been placed at the low sum of twenty cents, the church should be well filled on that occasion. The concert will commence at a quarter before eight o'clock.

Mr. Gragg of Holden died very suddenly last Thursday. He was over eighty years old and just before his death he was walking about the house. A gentleman in the room with him noticed that he looked a little strange and assisted him to a chair where he died almost instantly. He leaves a wife and three children.

PERSONAL. The News says: "The first lecture of the Methodist Society Course at Waldoboro, by Rev. H. W. Bolton of Bangor, was a success. An intelligent audience of about two hundred people listened to the address with good satisfaction. His subject, "The three H's that Win," the Hand, the Head and the Heart, was handled in an able manner. The lecture was pregnant with noble ideas which many individuals in this village might adopt with advantage to themselves and the community."

IL TROVATORE. The sale of tickets for the grand opera "Il Trovatore," by the Adelaide Phillips Opera Company, still continues brisk and a large audience will assemble at Norombega Hall next Tuesday evening to enjoy this delightful entertainment. The gentlemen of the Buskin Club are making extensive preparations for the comfort of their patrons on that evening. The aisles will be carpeted, a coat room open for the convenience of the gentlemen and opera glasses will be rented for the evening.

FLOWERING PLANTS. A fine audience assembled at Unity Hall last evening to listen to the second lecture in Mr. Bragdon's series on Botany. The subject of the discourse, "Flowering plants," proved a very interesting topic and was dealt with in a clear and pleasing manner. Commencing with the root, he traced the growth of the plant, in all its various stages, which were elegantly illustrated by views from the collections at Harvard University. The audience was very attentive throughout and at the close showed their appreciation by warm applause.

RUMFORD FALLS AND BUCKFIELD BRANCH RAILROAD. The Rumford Falls and Buckfield Branch Railroad have completed arrangements with C. H. & Z. E. Gilbert, of Oldtown—who have been running the Jericho Mills at Berlin, N. H., for several years—to erect a steam mill near Canton Point, to be three stories in height, 40 feet in width, 110 feet in length, with a capacity for manufacturing about 10,000,000 feet long and short lumber yearly. They have purchased the French farm of 160 acres and have located their mill, and now propose to saw out their frame and have the mill ready for the logs as they come down in the spring. They have contracted with Hammond, Hastings & Nutter and M. F. Hanson of Buckfield, each for several million spruce timber, and with the railroad to convey this lumber to Portland. A large snow-plow was forwarded by Superintendent Corser, Monday morning, in order to be prepared to keep the road in good running order all winter.

THE OPERA.
Mr. McQuown's Benefit.

The benefit performance tendered to Mr. McQuown last evening was fairly attended, the audience being larger than on either of the two preceding evenings. The singing and acting were superb, the performers seeming to be more and more at home upon each presentation, and the generous applause which greeted the artists gave good proof of the satisfaction given by their efforts. Our citizens have just reason to feel honored, and the singers themselves to feel proud of the manner in which they have acquitted themselves during the presentations of the past three evenings. Mrs. Shaw has, as it were at a bound, taken a front rank as a lyric artist of a high order, and we predict for her a brilliant future and can heartily assure the citizens of any place which shall be so fortunate as to have her come before them, of a rich musical feast. Mrs. Wasgatt used her rich contralto voice to the best advantage, and contributed largely to the success of the operas, her manner being easy and graceful and her singing very sweet, especially so in the beautiful ballad, "Only a Ribbon."

Much was expected of Mr. James Whitney, as his splendid tenor voice has been heard here in times past to the great delight of lovers of fine music, and he did not disappoint the expectations which had been raised. He has one of the finest tenor voices in the country, and it is under the highest state of cultivation, never failing to give the greatest delight to his hearers. He was the recipient of much applause, especially in the serenade "The Noontide Dream," and in the trio "She is Heartless," two charming compositions, and giving the widest scope to his superb voice. Of Mr. Moody we have already spoken and can only say that we but echoed the praises which are upon every tongue. He has good reason to be proud of his success.

Mr. Patten gave great satisfaction by his fine singing and acting, and fully complied with all the demands of his difficult role, as did also Mr. Silsby in his character of Counsel for the Plaintiff. Both these gentlemen have fine tenor voices, and sustain a high position in our local musical world. Mr. Barnaby, although having but a minor part as foreman of the jury, was very happy in his appreciation of his role, and his fine baritone voice was displayed to good effect. When we add to these a dozen charming and beautiful bridesmaids, elegantly attired, and selected from the cream of the young ladies of our city, all with fine voices, and an audience of as many more first class lady vocalists, together with the twelve jurymen, barristers, spectators etc., all first rate tenors and basses, making a grand chorus of over forty voices, we have an array of talent which few cities can equal, and none can excel.

Few of our citizens have an idea of the vast amount of work requisite to the production of such work as Mr. McQuown has presented, nor of the great expense—little short of five hundred dollars—which is attendent upon it, and we deeply regret that he should be a loser pecuniarily in the matter, after having devoted so much time and money to its production, and giving our citizens so rich a treat. We are glad to know, however, that the benefit last evening helped in some measure to reduce the amount of his loss, and trust that when he appears before the public again as beneficiary—if it is proper to use this term in connection with one who himself is conferring a benefit—that he will receive the reward due him as an accomplished artist, a public benefactor and a whole souled gentleman.

We would not close this notice without a word in praise of the orchestra, which so ably furnished the instrumental accompaniments to the operas and whose fine selections so artistically rendered, added so greatly to the pleasure of the audience. Of Mrs. Jewell as pianist, we can only reiterate what we have heretofore said of her as an accomplished and brilliant pianist who performed her part to the highest satisfaction of all and added much to the splendid accompaniment of the orchestra. We would not forget, also, to state that the brilliant and beautiful cadenza at the close of Mrs. Shaw's brilliant "Oh, could I but re-live the Past," in which the flute-like qualities of her voice were so charmingly displayed, was composed by Mr. McQuown especially for Mrs. Shaw, and makes a beautiful termination to an already beautiful song.

Lumber Statement.

Surveyor General Crossman furnishes us with the following statement and information in relation to the lumber business in this city:

Statement of amount of lumber surveyed in Bangor in 1878 compared with amount surveyed in 1876 and 1877:

	1876.	1877.	1878.
Green Pine,	15,001,624	10,655,443	14,255,319
Dry Pine,	4,613,248	4,048,709	5,224,078
Spruce,	82,087,887	85,480,149	81,358,656
Hemlock, &c.,	13,417,632	17,683,441	21,302,775
Total,	115,121,191	117,867,745	122,140,828

The whole amount of lumber surveyed since the establishment of the office of Surveyor General in 1832, is 7,054,547,563 feet, the average for the forty-seven years being 150,096,756 feet. Thus it will be seen the amount surveyed for the past three years has been considerably below the average; but that a steady gain has been made since 1876. The outlook for 1879 is very encouraging and the prospect is we shall survey enough to make good the average, if not more.

POROUS PLASTERS.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

Is the Best Kind.

This remarkable article contains all the valuable qualities of the slow acting common porous plaster and in addition an entirely new combination of active vegetable ingredients from which it derives its wonderful pain relieving, strengthening and curative properties. It relieves pain almost immediately and cures where other plasters will not even relieve. The manufacturers of Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster were awarded the highest and only medal of merit given for plasters at the Centennial, 1876. Your family physician will confirm our statement regarding its great merit.

For Lame and Weak Back, Kidney Disease, Rheumatism, Stubborn and Neglected Colds, Lung and Chest Difficulties, The Lameness and Weakness peculiar to Women, Nervous Affections of the Heart, Chills and Fever, Sciatica and Lumbago, Diseases of Children such as Whooping Cough, Colds and Croup, (when applied in its early stages), and all Local Aches and Pains of Young or Old.

IT IS SIMPLY THE BEST REMEDY EVER DEVISED OR KNOWN.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER

There is no other remedy so well adapted for the above class of ailments. No other remedy contains the same combination of medicinal ingredients. Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster is positively far superior to common porous plasters, and to all other external remedies including liniments, and the so-called electrical appliances. Its powerful influence is felt almost at the first moment of application. It gives relief, comfort, strength, and life to the afflicted. It is neat and convenient, also pleasant to wear, as it creates merely a sensation of gentle and stimulating warmth.

—CAUTION.—

There are FRAUDULENT and WORTHLESS imitations of Benson's Capcine Porous Plaster in the market. One in particular, having a similar sounding name, contains lead poisons. Each genuine Benson's Capcine Plaster has the word Capcine spelled C-A-P-C-I-N-E. Take no other.

to all persons contemplating insurance, the particulars of which may be learned on application to

CHAS. P. WIGGIN,
LOCAL AGENT.

Cash Assets Over
$86,000,000!

The following results of Policies recently paid show the superior advantages of insuring with this GREAT Company. The annual cash dividends in all these cases, exceeded the annual premiums varying from 100 to 150 per cent. These policies were accordingly more than self-sustaining.

No. of Policy.	Amount of Policy.	Dividend Additions.	Amount Paid.
1,477	$ 2,000	$ 2,717	$ 4,717
1,641	10,000	14,342	24,342

OLD-FASHIONED FOLK.

BY REBECCA R. PIERCE.

The good old fashioned people,
Methinks, they are the best,
Although we often find them
In homespun garments drest—
The plain and honest people,
Whose hearts with warmth o'erflow,
And who are more in favor
Of comfort, than of show

And there are other people,—
We meet them every day,—
Who with their gifts and graces,
Seem made of finer clay
And yet, to me it seemeth,
Fall oft in them we find
Not half the real goodness
Of the old fashioned kind

These plain and honest people
We meet upon our way,
Have, always, kindly greetings
And pleasant words to say
There's constantly around them
An atmosphere of rest —
The good, old fashioned people,
Who, surely are the best.

ANNE HYDE'S MISSION.

YANKEE CHARACTER PAINTING BY ROSE TERRY COOKE

"Betsey Ann! Betsey Ann! who's the bell a tollin' for?" screamed Miss Cerinthia Barber out of her kitchen window to the widow Drake at work in her garden

"Why, 'Squire Potter's wife died real sudden last night," answered the moderate widow, rising from the earth and settling her slat sun bonnet which an intrusive hollyhock had pushed aside. "Mr Tucker he told me so jest now when he went by to toll the bell. I says 'Who's dead?' says I, for I see he had the meetin' house key into his hand and he says 'Squire Potter's wife. She died right off, just like that,' says he, so I ask't him what she died of, and he said he didn't know, but he presumed likely it was heart disease, and I guess it's consider'ble likely 'twas, for she's looked real miser'ble quite a spell."

"Well, I guess 'twas heart disease, sure enough. I dunno' but I should ha' had it myself if I'd been married to Ben Potter."

"Why, how you do talk, Cerinthy!" gasped the widow, opening her mild green eyes to their fullest extent.

"I talk to some puppus, Betsey Ann, generally, or I mean to. I believe in usin' your privileges while they're spared to ye, and I do mean to say what's fac's as long as I live."

"Well, you be a master hand to speak your mind, that's so. I wish I had your grit, but I hain't; some pork will bile so, ye know, and some won't," and the widow returned to her onions. Miss Cerinthia drew her head in with an audible sniff, and said no more. Meanwhile all was dismay and confusion at the Squire's house on the hill: two little delicate girls were crying bitterly in the kitchen, where a stout Irish woman was alternately scolding and coaxing the poor children, who wanted their mother and could not find her. In the library, Squire Potter, a man some thirty years old, who had attained his title by being the only lawyer in the village, sat in his arm chair with his head buried in his hands. Upstairs in her chamber, still as a statue and no less fair, lay the sleeping shape that had once been sweet little Helen Hyde, and then Ben Potter's wife and the mother of the two crying children.

Very quietly she slept now, the lines of premature care and pain were all gone, an expression of pure rest relaxed the plastic features and the dark hair lay soft above a brow like a little child's for smoothness and purity of tint, looking at her you could not pity her, she was so fully at ease, the tired body was free from its persecuting soul, and cared nothing now for mortal pangs or demands of duty, it would return to the dust as it was and be racked no more — who would not congratulate it? As for those left to mourn, the little children were least to be pitied, for what did they know about death and dying? They would miss and mourn their gentle mother for a while, but in virtue of their childhood they would soon be comforted, it takes years to know how to grieve. He who sat in the library down stairs had an added sting to contend with, and one of which he was but half conscious: he had loved Nelly as well as he could love anything but himself, but he had not been good to her and his conscience had awakened just enough to hint to him that something was wrong. He tried to read his Bible and pray, for he was a professor of religion and went to church quite as regularly as the minister and to prayer meetings whenever there was a revival, but somehow his prayers did not run on even wheels, Nelly's white face rising before him, her sad dark eyes looking at him as they did when she was dying, with mute terror and reproach, the Bible texts had an ominous way of appearing to his half blinded eyes here and there on the page, and just those he did not want to see. What had his grief to do with such words as "Whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely," "Gentle and easy to be entreated," "Love is the fulfilling of the law," "Suffereth long and is kind," "Love your wives even as Christ also loved the church." These were not words that touched or helped his sorrow; he shoved the book aside and hid his face in his hands with a groan, if he had spoken the thought of his heart it would have been

"What am I going to do without her? Who will see that my dinners are just right and my shirts properly ironed? Who will take care of me when I am sick?" (The Squire was a martyr to dyspepsia, his friends said.) "I never shall have any comfort of my life now, the children must be attended to and Bridget looked after, and I shall have to do the marketing. Oh dear, poor little Nelly! I shall miss her every day, what shall I do?"

No doubt some softer ideas mingled now and then with these lamentings, but on the whole Mr Potter's grief was selfish, for he was a selfish man, and a tree is known by its fruit. He sat a long time alone in the library thinking how dreadfully he felt and wondering what would become of him, quite forgetful of the lonely little children left to Bridget's tender mercies, who had dinner to provide for and to cook, and no time to spare for compassion and consoling. But after a while he roused himself for the minister came in, and having offered such spiritual consolation as he knew how, being a very young man and lately settled in Riverton, he asked if he could do any friendly office for Mr Potter, telegraph to relatives or arrange for the funeral. The Squire had quite forgotten that Anne Hyde, Nelly's older sister, must be sent for to Rockford, where she was teaching, and his brother Paul in New York must know too, his other brother was in the army, and stationed now at some fort far in the west, and Nelly's brother was a missionary in Syria, there were no nearer relatives, Parson Hyde and his wife were long dead, and his own father and mother had died before he knew them. Anne and Paul would be the only available helpers.

When Ben Potter married Nelly Hyde, she was a bright sparkling, tender-hearted little woman, with great loving eyes, that indexed her nature, and a sweet, expressive face. She was one of those generous unselfish, affectionate creatures who grow into the Christian life, under good influences, as the tiny green bud grows into a fragrant and lovely rose, her father and mother had been old fashioned saints, after the pattern depicted in the catechism, whose chief end was to glorify God, and in a wholesome, cheerful atmosphere of living piety, their children had developed into practical, earnest Christians, according to their several types of character. Anne and Nelly were as radically different as sisters are apt to be. Anne was clear-headed, intelligent, grandly generous, but severely logical, and there is no logic so incisive as a woman's, for she demands it in practice as well as theory.

Anne was just, but Nelly had only one side toward the sterner traits,—she turned them all inward, she could deny herself, control her sensitiveness, her temper, her grief, or her joy, but she asked nothing from those around her in return, she married Mr Potter with a heart full of love and duty to him, and she served him with her whole soul, but she asked no answering devotion to reward her, though her soul was hungry for love and caresses. After a year or two she slowly discovered that her husband was a selfish egotist, and her heart began to break; for her discovery was not framed in such a way as to excuse her own grief, she only blamed herself that her life had not been more satisfying to him; it was her fault that he was moody, silent, dyspeptic—in short, everything was her fault!

Young, timid, delicate, with two little children, she spent herself in silent and lavish endeavor to make her home just what should please her husband, and herself his devoted slave; and with the unconscious tyranny of a selfish man, who tortures most those who cannot escape from and dare not resent his oppression, he made her home and her life miserable in the thousand minute ways which are ready to the domestic despot's hand. No wonder she died! Two feeble babies preceded her to the graveyard, a third was clasped to her breast in death, and when Anne bent over the elaborate coffin and beheld those wan and waxen faces with the stamp of heavenly peace set fair upon either brow the bitter words of the cynic Preacher fell from her lips "Wherefore I praise the dead which are already dead, more than the living which are yet alive."

After the funeral was over Mr. Potter proposed to Anne that she should give up her teaching and come and live at his house to care for him and the children. Anne knew him thoroughly, she had visited Nellie often enough to see what her husband was, and to pity her sister with all her tender heart, but she felt that in Helen's place she would herself have done differently. There were good traits dormant in Ben Potter, but a wife, and especially such a wife as Nellie could never call them out. Just now, however, she had no excuses for him in her mind, it seemed to her that he had as much as killed her sister and ruined her life as if he were the worst man on earth, and her spirit flamed with the bitter indignation that loss kindles. She was about to refuse his request instantly and finally, and perhaps would have made some observations more pungent than pleasant, but the children came stealing into the room, and climbing into her arms, hung about her neck and covered her with caresses. Poor little souls! their Aunt Anne was all they had left of motherhood, they clung to her with a grasp of despair, as it seemed to her excited feeling, she could not answer Mr. Potter then.

"Think of it, Anne!" he said leaving her to Nell and Katy, to whom as yet he had not shown any fatherly devotion, but who proved now his best friends.

Anne's plan of life had been to join her brother's mission in Syria, and nothing but Nellie's failing health and a dread she was afraid to acknowledge to herself of this very exigency had kept her so long in America. Now, as she sat there with the two tiny creatures—for though they were really five and seven years old, they were very small and slight for their age—clinging to her and kissing her with fondling hands and cool, soft lips, a flood of motherly longing and love burst upon her with sudden power. Was there anything so much her duty as to care for these babies, motherless and worse than fatherless? Were not they nearer and more manifestly her care than the Syrian heathen? If there was any self-denial in the matter it would be in staying there, for her brother had always been her pride and idol, and his wife was her dearest friend from school days. She had looked forward to sharing their pleasant home and hopeful work with warm enthusiasm all these years that a sense of duty to Helen had detained her at home, was that duty really over now? Was it not all the more urgent that she hated the idea of living under Mr. Potter's roof while he lived there too?

She prayed over it and thought over it, and every hour brought closer and closer the pressure of this newer need. "Do the duty that lies nearest thee, the rest will follow," had been her favorite school day motto; and a higher authority came to strengthen it. "He that provideth not for his own household hath denied the faith." If she left these children Mr Potter would marry again soon, probably, and who could tell into what hands they might fall? Her cheek reddened with indignation as the idea came to her—and if he did not at once marry who was there to care for these frail and helpless creatures? Already the house was in disorder and anarchy; the meals ill-cooked and served, the rooms neither swept or dusted, only her own interference had kept the little girls in comfort and cleanliness, it almost seemed to her that Nellie implored her from the grave to befriend her children, and at last she resolved to give up her place at Rockford and accepted Mr Potter's invitation, and the end of a week saw her installed in her new position.

Anne was a born manager. Her practical talent was heightened by her intellectual force, and it took but a short time for the domestic machinery to get into good running order.

Mr Potter had less to do with household affairs than ever, and they went on even more smoothly than in his wife's feeble and gentle reign. He was glad to be spared trouble, his selfish soul desired ease and peace at home above all things, but he desired it for himself. At first while Anne was comparatively a guest and her grief fresh for Helen, he acknowledged some restraints of civility, and showed that he could be a gentleman if he chose, but as the novelty wore off he lapsed into his old ways and became as moody, as snappish, as inconsiderate as ever. Anne was at first disposed to ignore his unpleasant ways and try to excuse them, but in thinking seriously one day about poor Nellie's thwarted and miserable life, it came to her mind that perhaps she owed some duty to Mr Potter as well as to the children, was it possible that he was unaware of his own disagreeable behavior? Was it not really his duty as a father to set a better example to his family? Above all was it the part of a Christian, such as he professed himself to be, to live such a selfish, unlovely, unchristian life? There was but one answer to this, and Anne was not a woman to shrink from obvious duty however unpleasant, though she would far rather have encountered a school full of heathen children than try to evangelize Ben Potter in his own house. But she must use tact discretion, perhaps sharpness in dealing here, and attacking a man's faults puts his self-respect on the defence, she must take other grounds, however, she fell back, after devising a thousand ways in which to approach him, on the Bible admonition "Take no thought how or what ye shall speak, for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak," and if ever that promise applied to daily life, was it not now?

That very evening the hour came. Mr Potter had not found the day agreeable, an intricate case had worried him, a debtor had failed to pay an overdue note, and he had over-eaten at dinner. Here were reasons enough for dyspepsia, and though he managed to preserve an aspect of silent disgust at the tea table, no sooner was Anne left alone with him than he gave way to his inward irritation, snapped at her efforts to mend the fire into blaze and brightness, and at last burst out savagely "Let that fire alone will you!"

Anne looked at him steadily, gathered up her work and left the room; her own quick temper flamed up so swiftly she dare not trust herself to speak, she did not know how her flashing eyes spoke for her. At first the man was angry, what business had she to reprove him for a mere snappishness? Could not a man do and say what he liked in his own house? What was a man's house for if not to be free to do and say what he liked therein? His memory recalled Nelly's conduct when such doings and sayings occurred in her lifetime, how she shrank and quivered, the tears filling her eyes and her lip trembling till he was enraged at such a "fuss," and went on out of mere exasperation. Then came back the dead face of the vanished Nelly, the look of relief and peace that reproached him from her coffin; a sense of justice bade him acknowledge that Anne pursued the better course, that Helen had suffered at his hands and suffered needlessly; she never left him to sulk in solitude; she always dressed herself to soothe his moods; it was she who apologized as if she had made him cross; she who cowered and cringed and even provoked him by timidity and terror as cowards always irritate a tyrant. He did not like this train of thought; neither did he like to be left alone this stormy night with his own reflections; for the wind howled and the rain beat and something recalled to him an old story of a house that was founded upon sand, and he could not banish it.

Anne, meanwhile, went up-stairs to the nursery and sat down by her sleeping darlings; her thoughts, too, were not comfortable; what if the course she had taken should separate her from these children who were dear as heart's blood to her? Hot tears dimmed her eyes as she faced the possibility. But she knew she had done the thing she thought right and best; she must trust the consequences to God, whatever they were; and bending her head above the tranquil sleepers she prayed long and fervently for strength to do her duty whatever it was, and for their good and peace in this world and the next whoever might minister to them here. Then she went to her room calmed and strengthened.

But she made the mistake most common to women in judging of men; she had not considered Ben Potter's sense of justice. It would not have been like him or like most of his sex to resent a slight vexation by a real injury; there are exceptions, no doubt; men can be as unjust, as dishonest and as cruel as the law allows, even to those for whom they have professed deep affection; but it is most often the case that they mean to be and are magnanimous,—except to their wives,—and nothing could have been further from Mr. Potter's thought than to send Anne away from his household after all she had given up to take charge of it, simply because he was vexed with her.

She was surprised the next morning when he welcomed her with a pleasant smile, for he could be very pleasant when he felt like it, and said, "Anne, you shouldn't have been vexed with me last night; when I am cross you must lay it to the right cause, it is dyspepsia that is cross, not me."

And he was more surprised at her answer, for Helen would have met such a dubious apology with a flood of tender assurance that he was not to blame; that she was silly and cowardly, and ought to have known better than to worry him when he was suffering; in short, have begged his pardon for his own ill-temper, and protested it was all her own fault. But Anne looked coolly into his eyes and said "Are you then so weak a man that dyspepsia can overthrow your religion?"

"Whew!" ejaculated Mr. Potter; "aren't you coming it rather strong, Anne?"

"Am I?" said she gravely. "Ben, you have two children to bring up; do you wish them to excuse their faults of spirit by their bodily pains and aches?"

He began to walk up and down the library uneasily.

"Do you think that courtesy, kindness and patience are physical states, or Christian virtues?"

The children bounded into the room just at this junction, so rosy, happy and sweet that their father's heart suddenly gave a leap of unusual pleasure; whether it was the timely interruption or the lovely aspect that was so welcome, it might not profit us to inquire, it is certain that Anne's questions got no answer that day, but perhaps for that very reason they echoed more and more through his soul, his conscience was touched with a spark of stinging fire, he looked back on the eight years of his marriage with Helen and said bitterly out of the strife within him, "She never said anything like this to me!"

The argument was specious, but flattering, that night found him again by his library fire, with Anne opposite, his face was grave and almost sad as he opened the question

"Anne, you asked me very pointed questions this morning, and I have found it hard to answer them, perhaps my best answer is that in all the years Helen and I were married, she never once found fault with me."

Anne's face blazed, and the bitter truth sprang resistlessly to her lips

"She was afraid to."

Mr. Potter was confounded. Facts are hard things to strike with; he did not speak, and Anne went on

"You must admit that this was so, but let us leave Helen out of the question, 'God requireth that which is past,' but it is not for man to do so. I spoke very honestly to you, Ben, I know you desire and mean to be a Christian man, but I do not think you give religion a fair chance. I certainly know that if the Bible is true a Christian life means a life like Christ's or it means nothing, and neither you nor I believe that He went about in any spirit of discourtesy, selfishness or inconsiderateness, His life preached in unison with His lips; and I believe that unless ours does, we take upon us the name of God in vain, and profane the holiness of our profession as truly and thoroughly as if we blasphemed and cursed with our lips.

"Strong language, Anne."

"Strong facts, Ben."

She said nothing more, a caller from the village came in, and Anne was glad, for she knew that a few words are far better than many, but when it was time for prayers, and Mr Potter brought the Bible from its place, he found it open at the last chapter of Phillippians and his eye fell on one of the very texts that had haunted him after Helen's death "Finally, my brethren, whatsoever things are true," &c. He was a little indignant; he thought Anne had set a trap for him, and turned rapidly over till he came to the third chapter of Peter's first general Epistle. His usual reading was not much in the latter part of the Testament, those practical exhortations that were addressed to the first disciples pleased him as little as the like preaching pleases some congregations in these days, he preferred the glowing poetry of the minor prophets, or the historical records of Israel, as far more comfortable for daily perusal than the homely thrusts of keen insight and sharp advice which was aimed at those early Christians who became Christians indeed and endured hardness and martyrdom with faith and patience. So now, when he saw that this chapter commenced with a homily on the duty of wives, he began it with crisp satisfaction as who should say "This is the right sort of doctrine!" Unfortunately, the duties of husbands are equally set forth in the following verses, and the pithy exhortations to pity, courtesy, peace and gracious conversation which follow, were like nails set in their places and forced in with rapid blows.

"Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord, and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?" Surely it was so that night, for the very finger of God seemed to have set these lines before him, and pointed his roused conscience to their force and meaning. Hitherto he had thought it enough for his profession and standing to have lived an outwardly upright and moral life, that he owed any duty to God in taking His name upon him had not been his thought. Now he saw as with new eyes what disgrace and dishonor his daily conduct had been to the Lord whose title he wore, and the conviction appalled him, he closed the book and knelt beside it, but the routine of his usual worship was forgotten, for his heart spoke abundantly from penitent lips, and in returning freshly to the Master for pardon he found peace and strength also. Anne's tears fell freely, she was also convicted of hard judgment, she had not expected so much candor and honesty in this man, or such a real desire to do right. In fact, she had not really believed him to be a Christian, though she thought he had intended what he had professed.

When they both rose from their knees they looked at each other with dim eyes.

"Anne," said he, humbly, "you must help me, too; I shall be a stumbler in the new path; have patience with my faults, dear, even as the Lord will."

"Oh, Ben," sobbed Anne, "I was hard in my judgement of you; I did not give you credit for your strength or your honesty."

"Don't be unjust to yourself, Anne, credit for your good traits was not what I needed; my eyes wanted opening, and I believe the Lord sent you to do it, and after him I have you to thank."

Nothing could have humbled Anne more than Ben's magnanimity and gratitude; if her spirit had been a little pharisaic before it was freed from such strain now; and as Mr. Potter went on, day after day and month after month, growing more and more into the likeness of the Lord whose name he wore; stumbling and lapsing now and then, to be sure, but with manful strength and courage pursuing the way of life, Anne learned both to admire and respect him; the children grew to love and honor their father, and the church recognized a purer spirit and a deeper godliness and, therefore, loveliness in this prominent member.

"Did ever you see a cretur so changed as Squire Potter is sence his fust wife died?" chirped Widow Drake to Miss Barber, as they went home from prayer meeting five years after our first interview with them.

"Well, he is considerable different, that's a fact," Miss Cerinthia answered. "I used to mistrust them times that he wa'n't nothin' but a professor, but seems as though he'd got to the practicin' part on't now."

"'Twas a good thing Anne Hyde married him I guess, Cerinthy; she's a splendid woman; I expect the loss of his fust was blessed to him."

"I guess more likely the gainin' of his second was. I heered quite a spell sence that she'd set her mind on goin' as a missionary 'long with her brother, but I dono' but what she's had mission-work to do nearer hum, any way, he's a'most an excellent man now, and them children is patterns; lively and healthy and good too. I tell you Betsey Ann there's more'n one kind o' heathen a goin', and mabbe this was Anne Hyde's mission arter all."

"Mabbe 'twas," meekly sighed the chorus.

LETTER CARRIERS.

All letters are delivered free by carriers when addressed to street and number. People should inform their correspondents of above and have their letters addressed accordingly.

Persons leaving their address at the General Delivery can also have their letters sent, but it is much more convenient to have the street and number on, and they will be delivered earlier than if the same is put on at the office. Carriers make two deliveries daily, the first trip supplying the extremes of their routes.

Collections are made morning and evening in season for important mails—the down town boxes fifteen and the up town boxes thirty minutes before closing mails at the office

Holidays the Carrier's Window will be open for the delivery of letters from 8½ to 9½ A. M, and from 7½ to 8 P M. Sundays from 8½ to 9½ A M.

Any irregularities in the Carriers' department should be reported to the office

ENVELOPES.

No additional charge will be made for printing the name and request to return, across the left hand upper corner of the envelopes furnished by the Post Office Department, (samples of which may be seen at the Cashier's window,) when ordered in lots of not less than 500

A request for the return of a letter to the writer, if unclaimed within thirty days, or less, written or printed with the writer's name, post office and State, across the left end of the envelope, on the face side, will be complied with.

☞ The public are earnestly recommended to procure Stamped envelopes with printed return request, as the expense is less, and letters thus endorsed, if not delivered to the person addressed, are returned to the writer free of charge.

First class envelopes of above furnished at $22 80 per thousand

Stamps cut from Stamped Envelopes cannot be used to prepay postage. The use of such Stamps is punishable by a fine of fifty dollars. Stamped Envelopes, spoiled in directing, are redeemed at this office.
